It becuse Windows is setup to be "idiot proof" by default meaning it hides system files and dll's. As a general rule, if you don't know how to turn off this feature then you probably don't need to make these files visible.

Anyway: Tools > Folder Options > View > Hidden files and folders > Show hidden files and folders

Also Tools > Folder Options > View > Hide extensions for known file types

General HavocAs a general rule, if you don't know how to turn off this feature then you probably don't need to make these files visible.

You might just want to take this bit of advise.
