I think I remember reading that the remaining human population and the GDI forces moved out to sea to escape the tiberian. But the tiberian adapted to live on and in the water, so the GDI is kinda on the run. Nod has somewhat diminished into a smaller threat, but Cabal has become a very large threat. His army has moved underground to escape the tiberian lifeforms, and the watchful eye of GDI. He still continues Kane's work with tiberian lifeforms. There was something else about the Scrin.....but I cannot remember, but I believe they have a larger role in the storyline now.

Well thats what I think it is about. Either I made this all up in the my head, sounds like a good storyline, or it is some true information.

Tiberium had moved to the sea during FS... look at all the kinda grassy type stuff on the water in some maps.

Than what is GDI's space station for? They wouldn't need to go under water or whatever if they have a freaking huge space station that they can live in.

The Philadelphia, if memory serves me correctly, is a really high-level military complex, and it probably couldn't hold the majority of the world. My solution: create a special breed of goats that eat Tiberium, and then clean out the planet in about 5 minutes.

The people that he is talking about that went out to sea were probably the people who were contaminated by tiberium. The Philadelphia space station restricted any persons who came in contact with tiberium from entering the ship.

That's ok, since the majority of the world's population was killed off by Tiberium, and alot of those that didn't die from Tiberium poisoning were mutated, who wouldn't be allowed on the Philadelphia, also, there is a good number a people who are loyal to Nod and wouldn't be brought onto the Philadelphia. So this space station could hold most of if not all of everyone who is left.
