Air Force?

They get air conditioned dorms. AF is the powder puff of the military.

---

On the other hand... This is typical of a navy guy. Can't handle an Army guy so he calls in the Marines to help.

Have you ever known a Marine that wasn't lost.

How do you think they became Marines?

Point well taken.

They always seem to find the bar I was in to start crap, though.

BTW...I just read that "US Marines take over for Army in Iraq".....um, could that be the dumbest news headline ever? Fugging Army V Corps trying to take all the credit.....shame on them! lol
Anyway, Good job boys & girls making our country proud

WTF? I see this post and I'm thinking "That's cool, bury the hatchet, water under the bridge, can't we all just get along, etc....", but then as I read down all I see is a bloody flamefest from a bunch of Marine Corps wannabes (Hareman excluded). Look, I can't help it you guys chose the easy road all those years ago, just as you can't help it that I joined the most elite infantry fighting force (barring some Special Forces) in the world. I'm sure if you had it to do again you would choose to be a Devil Dog, but alas, until time travel IS possible, you'll just have to be content with second best which isn't bad, really. Anyway, one more thing to say:

Universally
Supreme
Military
Combatants

We are the Few, the Proud, the Ownage!

Combat Search and Rescue is the only branch of the AirForce I had any dealings with (unless you several jumps and a few fights) they have my undying respect. Anybody crazy enough to take a helicopter into a hot LZ or medevac sit in OK in my book.

So yeah, Hareman,

A marine and a navy (lets see...) soap-tosser are in "the head" at the same time. They both take a piss and they go to wash their hands. The navy kid washes his hands and dries them while the marine just walks toward the door. The navy kid calls out:

"You know, in the Navy, they teach us to wash up."

The marine turns around, laughs, and says:

"In the marines, they teach us not to piss on our hands."
