Ides of March = March 15. In Shakespeare's play "Julius Ceasar", Julius Ceasar was warned about the Ides of March. The Ides of March was prophecied that he would be killed. He ignored that warning and was stabbed to death.

Act I, Scene II.

That'll teach Caesar for not packing major heat under his Greek bathrobe while he was in the Senate place.

On another note, this should have an "OT:" in front of the title.

Considering how insanely irrelevant and off-topic it is.

Have a nice day.

da_shizEt tu Brute?

Kai su, teknon?

He spoke Greek, not Latin

Ofcourse he knew Latin, but all the important people and the wannabees spoke Greek.

if you read Shakespeare's play, while Julius Ceasar is being stabbed, he looks up at Brutus and says, "Et tu Brute?"

da_shizif you read Shakespeare's play, while Julius Ceasar is being stabbed, he looks up at Brutus and says, "Et tu Brute?"

Then Shakespear was wrong
