Well for the past week my computer been really sluggish compared to previous times, and programs have been locking up a lot. So I was in the middle of ending a program through task manager, and decided to check the cpu usage and I saw this

I was surprised it being so high and still being able to function at all

I looked at processes and found this program

But I thought that that is the windows exe? What should I do? Put in the back-up disk and reinstall windows? If so, do I need to back-up anything, because if I reinstall windows XP, will it delete any valuable information or will everything be fine?

hey dude long time

Yeh, good old adware..

Mate try this free one google spybot. Download it and it will fix all that. GREAT program!

yeah, I deleted McAfee and installed Norton, I had something called (forgot exact name) W3D.supernova.worm.

followed the removal instructions, and went in safe mode looked in the registry Hkey_Local_Machine\Software\Microsoft\Windows\CurrentVersion\Run found the registry key supernova, and everything is right as rain. Thanks mate your best bet is to re-install windows.

lol. prop like WTF?!. but you will have so much adware stuff you can't get rid off it would be far easier.
