Aeonreapermmm'kay, try installing it the right way in the right folder you n00b.
He needs to go to his Renegade Data folder and find the n00b folder. If there isn't a n00b folder, he'll have to create one. Then install Renguard into the data folder which is in the Renegade folder.

Maybe your Englisch is a load of crap. The way you typed your post is not in the form of a question, but as a statement that says Renguard is a load of crap. Therefore people treat you like a load of crap.

Now please edit your post or something and make it look more like this: "*story what went wrong*, *ask how to solve problem*" so not: "*undetailed story about it not working right* *opinion***".

You understand now? or else do you already get Englisch lessons at school?. If you do get lessons you might ask your teacher how to ask a question in Englisch.

*kids these days... tsk*

Now that's a question....

Hmmm perhaps he was getting confused.

Personally, Renguard to me isnt something i wish my network servers to use(Yet). The only reason being, they are both hosted off computers and are both new. We have just built up a few regular players and i dont want to use renguard until i get a hosted and dedicated server and the clients have gotten renguard themselves...so maybe in a few months.

Besides the two pc's that they are hosted off, are not under my control physically as they are on the pc's of two people in my IRC network.

Not that I dont understand renguard is bran new and was just released but I have played renegade since it came out and renguard isn't something I'm getting into. Theres a lot of people on other game servers complaining. They say it isn't what it was said to be. Renguard is a good idea that was published to fast.

note to blazer:

If your making software for a game, n00bs gotta be able to use it even though that jackass was making lame ass comments.

In the future renguard will be something worth downloading. Until then I'm sticking with BC, HT, and TWA. Mods work the best for now.

I think you have to draw a distinction here, as I see it Renguards primary function is to stop cheating.

To that end if Renguard doesn't catch a particular cheat and a new version is required that is an enhancement (The list of cheats it catches has been increased).

However problems with users being kicked when they are acutally running Renguard, install problems, compatiability issues with other regulators are bugs.

IMO there are good reasons why renguard should have been released even if it didn't catch all cheats, but critical flaws in the network should have been caught in testing, before it was made into a production release.

Note: I understand that catching all bugs is rarely possible, however the simple solution would have been to call version 1.00 a public alpha.

You can't test a network designed for thousands of people with 25 people. Period. All the problems showed up AFTER we finished the beta. It's because of the network load.
